

Nominations are open for Paris Open Source Think Tank Business Cases

Due to the success of the Spring Open Source Think Tank's business case presented by the State of California, we are once again looking to build the Think Tank's core content around real world situations. For our Paris event, coming up September 28 and 29, we're looking for one European public sector entity and one private sector company.

The organizations fortunate enough to be selected will benefit from the insights of more than 100 open source experts from around the globe. Additionally, they will get three free passes to the Think Tank. The State of CA derived so much insight from the participants that they immediately asked Olliance Group to compile the results and present the findings to their Council of State CIOs (with over 80 departmental level CIOs in attendance) one week after the Think Tank ended.

In order to be presented at the Think Tank, the selected organization must work with Olliance to develop a formal business case based upon the entity's current open source situation and future plans and goals and will need to present the case to the attendees of the conference during the event. The business case participants must have executive-level sponsorship and attendance throughout the two day event.

To learn more, and see the State of California's business case please go to:

http://thinktank.olliancegroup.com/tt2010main/content_material_public.php

If interested in submitting your organization to be one of the business cases please send an email to: Andrew@olliancegroup.com, with the name of the organization, why you think your organization would make a good business case and the best times for a conference call.